T. O. DAVIS

TORONTO, Feb. 9.—An interesting breach of promise case will occupy the courts shortly. A writ has been issued at Osgood Hall at the instance of Mrs. Orr, a widow lady, against John Elliott, of the Elliott House, claiming $5,000 damages. Elliott recently married his third wife, a young girl of eighteen.

The Mail this morning demands a thorough organization of the detective and police forces, the former especially, and people are talking of forming vigilance committees.

THE BAND CONCERT.

On Monday evening last the P. A. C. Band gave another of their grand concerts, which was a success in every respect. The managing committee deserve great credit for the able manner in which the whole entertainment was conducted; they spared no pains to have an interesting and amusing programme.

Col. Sproat filled the chair in his usual affable and courteous manner. He opened the entertainment with a few remarks as to the occasion of the concert, and trusted the audience would go away as well pleased this evening as on others of a similar character. The band favored us with some beautiful and well played selections, which says a good deal for the musical talents and ability of Mons. St. Louis to have brought forward a number of young men, none of whom ever played an instrument before, to such perfection, and also for the perseverence of the members themselves.

The programme was well laid out. After a lively air from the band, Mr. Brooks sang the "Death of Nelson" very well indeed, and shows that he has command over the excellent tenor voice which he possesses. Taking the vocalists and readers in order—the band playing selections alternately with vocalists and readers. "A Warrior Bold" was sang by Mr. A. St. Louis. This is his second appearance before the public of Prince Albert, and it is a treat to hear his rich tenor voice. His second appearance he sang the "British Lion" so well and was so enthusiastically encored that he gave "Tim Flaherty." Mr. Maclise read "Horatius, or the Defence of the Bridge" in such good style that the chairman asked him again during the evening to take the place of a singer who was unavoidably absent; this time he read the "Address of Henry v. to his Soldiers before Harfleur," by Shakespeare, and added not a little to his reputation as an elocutionist. The first comic song of the evening was "Poor, but Still a Gentleman," by Mr. C. McGregor, and was so well rendered and appreciated by the audience, which was shown by their repeated calls of encore, that he gave "The Belle of the Ball," which brought down the house. The next piece was "Friends of my Youth," as a quartette, Mr. Way taking the lead in his usual talented manner, assisted by Messrs. Hurd, Agnew and A. St. Louis. The reading of "A Bashful Young Man," by Mr. A. H. Clark was well executed in his easy manner. Elocution is either a natural gift, which few possess, or is acquired by long and constant practice, and all we can say is, that Mr. Clark is a good elocutionist. It seems the managing committee intended to send the assemblage on their way home rejoicing, for they kept Mr. T. O. Davis until the last. We can say nothing but what has appeared in those columns before about that gentleman's singing of Irish songs, and that is, that both in and out of character, Mr. Davis knows how to manage an audience and keep them in roars of laughter. This occasion was no exception; he first sang "My Beautiful Daughter Belinda" and could not satisfy the audience until he sang "Duffy's Grand Opening Night" and "The Bould McIntyres. The entertainment closed with the singing of the national anthem.

COMMUNICATIONS.

A DENIAL.

To the Editor of the Times.

SIR,—Please allow me this opportunity through the columns of your paper, to deny a report which seems to have been successfully circulated about Prince Albert and vicinity, to my prejudice, by Mr. John Brown and others, to the effect that I was the individual who informed on him a short time ago for making whiskey and having an illicit still in his possession; and also that I coerced his man into showing the police where the said still was concealed. Now in the first place I was not the person who laid the information against Mr. Brown for making whiskey nor for having a still in his possession, which I can prove at any time by the Justice of Peace who tried the case, but was simply subpoenaed as a witness in that case. I think the police are quite competent of performing their own detective work without the assistance of outside parties, which they have effectually proven in this instance. Thanking you, Mr, Editor,

I remain,
W. C. RAMSAY.

THE SCHOOL BOARD.

The adjourned meeting of the School Board was held in the school house on Monday afternoon, when the trustees were all present.

After the meeting was formally opened, it was moved by Mr. Macarthur seconded by Mr. Macdonald, that Messrs. Stewart and Macdonald wait upon the Rev. Mr. Parker in reference to the renting of the Methodist Church for a school house. Carried.

It was then resolved that Mr. Macarthur wait on Miss Baker to arrange for keeping the school open until the end of June.

The applications for assessor and sec.-treasurer were opened and read, and that of Mr T. E. Baker at $75 for assessor and W. E. Marshall for sec.-treasurer at $50 per annum, were accepted. We understand that Mr. Marshall has since declined.

The board then adjourned until the first Thursday in March at 4 o'clock p.m.

The trustees expect to open school in the new building in a few days.

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 20, 1885.

We are glad to see that steps are being taken for the passage of an Act at the approaching session of the Manitoba Legislature, to protect the workingmen from dishonest contractors. The subject, admittedly, is a very difficult one to deal with, but the evil is so great as to necessitate remedial measures of an effective character in order to protect men whose entire means of support is their daily wage.

The Chicago Tribune says: "The shooting of O'Donovan Rossa must be explained on one of two theories. Either the Englishwoman who fired at him is a crank, whose brain was inflamed with Rossa's rabid utterances against her country, or else she was employed to shoot off a toy pistol while he was around in order to contribute to the notoriety on which he lives. At all events, he does not apper to be much hurt,and experiences but a small part of the torture which he would incite the dynamite fiends to deal out to innocent men, women and children, whose lives are threatened by every explosion in the Fenian "war" upon England. The great misfortune in the case is that the shooting of Rossa will make him a martyr to "the cause of Ireland" in the minds of the Irish laborers and poor servant girls of the country who contribute of their hard earnings to the maintenance of such agitators as he and his associates. He is really the victim of his own incendiarism—just as much as the man who sets fire to a house and fails to escape from the flames. He will make the most of the episode, as already indicated by his absurd theory that the English Government is responsible for the attempt to kill him. If the English Government had arranged the job, it would have been done much more effectively."

EDITORIAL COMMENTS.

Never since the memorable siege of Kars has such earnest attention and sympathy been shown in war-like operations as in the defence of Khartoum. The spectacle of the brave English soldier—the christian warrior, as he is called—holding his own with his handful of men against overwhelming odds, pent up in a small city in the midst of a hostile country, was well calculated to draw forth the warmest expressions of admiration from a hero-worshipping people like the British,and profound sorrow followed the receipt of the despatches cabled by Gen. Wolseley. In London the utmost consternation prevailed. Mr. Gladstone at once called a Cabinet meeting to discuss this new and serious aspect of affairs.

◆

The Winnipeg Sun says: "The gratifying intelligence is received from Ottawa that a new extradition treaty between England and United States is likely to be soon secured, and of sufficient scope to prevent the abuses which at present exist in consequence of the inefficient treaty at present in existence. It is to be hoped that it will be comprehensive enough to virtually establish free trade in criminals and to level down the international barriers which now offer a premium to crime. It is rather humiliating, however, that the negotiations for a treaty which will deeply affect Canada should be first carried on between the United States and the Mother Country; that its provisions should be submitted for our approvel, and that it should then be returned to Downing street, when the negotiatons with Uncle Sam can be renewed. Surely, this country should be allowed to make treaties of such a character with the United States as best suits her interests, without Imperial interference.

Prof. Goldwin Smith, on the expected application of the C. P. R., says: "We do not know what view parliament will take of these proposals. They come in the nature of a surprise to the country, as the report that the company intend asking for additional assistance this session was flatly contradicted. The country is deeply involved in this enterprise already, and it is too late now to turn back. The construction of the road must go on. But the time would seem to have arrived for calmly considering the whole subject, and determining whether it would not be the part of wisdom to make haste slowly and rather wait a year or two longer for the completion of the road than pile additional burdens on the back of the country for the sake of hurrying it to completion by acceding to the proposals which the company now makes. There seems to be no end to its demands. It is like the horse-leech's daughter, continually crying 'give, give.' We believe it to be the case that if the country had known at the outset that the road would cost as much as it already has, it would not have embarked in the enterprise. The original bargain was that the company was to receive $25,000,000 and 25,000,000 acres of land, together with the portions of the road already completed, valued at another 20,000,000. In addition to this it has had the interest on its bonds guaranteed, has been advanced a loan (which will turn out to be a gift), amounting to $30,000,000, and is now rapping at the door of the treasury for what will represent at the very least twenty five or thirty millions more. Where is all this going to end?"

At a banquet in Ottawa recently, Mr. Davin, in replying to the toast of the "Parliament of Canada"—in a speech which the Citizen describes as witty and interesting, dwelt on, among other things, the tendency of Parliamentary life to a minimum of intelligence, and said that unless some force was brought into play to check this, representative Government could not last. Burke said nothing which did not stand with credit can stand long, and when the constituencies sent men to Parliament, many of whom were laughed at in all the galleries, and some of whom excited contempt and abhorrence,the symptoms were dangerous. In the States, here, in England, the same tendency was seen. In England the middle class got power in 1832. In 1867 the people were enfranchised. In the States for one hundred years the people had ruled; in Canada for some forty years. When each recurring election a voter found himself a fractional part of a sovereign, it behoved him as he valued constitutional liberty and self-government to cast his ballot into those urns of fate, having a single eye fixed on the good of the country. He said he was convinced that the North-west, where all his interests were, could not be kept any longer without representation, and expressed the hope that when representation was given men would be sent down worthy of the brave and hardy settlers—the pioneers of great western Provinces—and capable of adding to the weight and wisdom of the Canadian Parliament.

ADRIFT ON A FLOE.

The following particulars of the frightful experience of the Prince Edward Island party, who started for Cape Traverse in three ice boats and spent two days and a night on an ice floe during a blizzard, will be read with interest.

The distance from Cape Traverse, P. E. I., to Cape Tormentine, N.B., is nine miles, and when the Straits of Northumberland are frozen up the mails and passengers are carried across in ice-boats. On the morning of February 4th three of these boats put out from Cape Traverse with seven passengers and crews numbering altogether fourteen. The ice was unusually rough and in places broken, and, to add to the difficulties of the dangerous journey, an intensely cold wind blew in the face of the travellers. Progress was extremely slow, and when night fell the men were fully two miles from the mainland. Nearly all were by that time much exhausted, and the crews of the boats, most of the members of which were beginning to feel the frost, refused to proceed further, declaring that they would be unable to reach the shore in the darkness.

It was decided to make a halt for the night. One of the boats was broken up to serve as fuel. A fire was built, and preparations were made to spend the lonely hours till morning as comfortably possible. The small heat emitted by the single fire was of no service at all. Without a particle of food, and with a biting northerly wind, the men found the night almost interminable. When dawn came they were in a deplorable condition, the limbs and faces of several being frozen, and the suffering of the others almost as bad. The day was even more terrible and bitter. The temperature was about 20° below zero. To add to the feelings of despair that were falling over the group, they found that they had drifted many miles below their destination into the middle of the straits.

Onb sturdy soul among them, Capt. Muncey Irving, commander of one of the ice-boats, managed to stir up his companions to make some exertions for their lives, and after as short a delay as possible they started off on a tramp back toward the island. Many times during the succeeding hours, which proved to nearly all of the party hours of agony, during which they felt like giving up in despair. Sometimes one would drop on the snow-covered ice in exhaustion, telling the others to leave him to die and save themselves. Capt. Irving, however, each time spurred them on to renewed efforts, and those in a better state assisted the helpless as far as possible. At last, after a journey which seemed the length of years, the spire of De Sables church on the Argyle shore was espied, and a final heroic endeavor was made to reach land. When they approached a little nearer they were observed by the people on shore, who hurried to the scene and helped them to land. Had the men been one hour longer on the ice, darkness would again have fallen about them, and in all probability not one would have lived until morning.

Among those who had endured the hardships of the two days and night and had the most miraculous escape from a horrible death was Mr. McIntyre, a member of the House of Commons for Kings, P.E.I., who had just started on his way to Ottawa to attend the session which has just opened. He was one of those who suffered most. None of the people are expected to die, but a number of them will lose the use of some of their limbs for a long time, and in several cases it may be found necessary to resort to amputation.

SLANG.

Slang has this value that it shows how language grows. The English tongue is so vigorous that it seizes whatever it needs for growth, just as it did in its infancy. At that period direct imitations of sounds were made into words, as the young vandals of to-day use "chink" for "money." Further on in the tongue, it took from ordinary speech those initiative words, and converted them to new uses, just as you say "ticker" for "watch" and "puff" for "advertisement." The contraction of words is another stage, as "mob," now perfectly good English, was at first merely slang for the Latin "mobile," the fickle crowd, as "cab" was slang for "cabriolet," and "furlong" for "furrow-long," the length of a furrow, and as "nob" is slang for "nobility." We make words from men's names in the same way I suppose as "boycotting" may be good English soon. "Martinet," now indispensable, was the name of an historic general over strict in discipline. "Derrick" was a famous hangman of the 17th century, in honor of whom the roughs denominated the gallows-like hoisting apparatus; and these are two only out of scores of cases. Many of the words that are respectable enough now were once gutter children. "Drag," for instance, was a thieves' word for carriage, and "dragsmen" the particular variety of thieves who followed the carriage to cut away the baggage from the rack behind. But "drag" is good English now for a private coach. "Kidnap" was thieves' slang for child stealing; that is to "nab a kid." "Tie" for cravat was as much a slang or low word as "choker" is now. "Conundrum," "donkey" and "fun" were all slang words, though perhaps not so low. "Bore" was slang, and so were "waddle" and "bother."—St. Nicholas.

THE GREAT NORTH-WEST.

The realization of enormous fertile plains unencumbered by the forest, is really a new thing to former readers about Canada. In old days a settler was often called—by us in Britain at least—a "backwoodsman," and his place was spoken of as a "clearing." He began his battle with the axe. Now, the first tool used by the farmer in the North-west is the plough, but the immense area which may be thus conquered is being realized only by degrees. Our eyes, and those of many Canadians too, are being gradually opened to its real use. I say "real use," for a notable feature in the whole estimate and outlook of Canadian resources is the early apprehension of this area; it has long been appreciated and used, but for another purpose than that to which it seems presently in great part about to be devoted. It was seen to be fruitful, not in corn, but in fur. Wealthy London companies, having obtained concessions in the very early days of emigration, employed the huge Territories of the North-west simply for the getting of skins. This use of them began a little more than two hundred years ago, when Charles II. granted corporate privileges of which neither he nor the recipients perceived the full value. But one result was the penetration of the huge region by enterprising trappers or gatherers of skins. Myriads upon myriads of square miles were studded with small and sparse "forts." Away up to the Northern Lakes, under the shadow of the Rocky Mountains, along the banks of the far flowing Saskatchewan, here and there, through it may be at intervals of some 200 miles, a rude shelter or fort was built. These forts dotted the whole region controlled by the North Fur and Hudson's Bay Companies—finally combined. Lonely little garrisons, sometimes of only two or three Europeans—often Scotchmen—dwelt in them, receiving and periodically sending away the skins brought in by the Indians. The forts, though very far apart, were really numerous and connected. The connection was made, however, by the thinnest thread, a mere trail, which sometimes none but the Indian eye and foot could detect. Still the solitary guard-houses were thus finally linked, and at distant intervals when travelling by sledge was least difficult, heard some late echoes of the larger world of men. These came in winter up the frozen rivers, which made great flat, white, high roads, winding through the plains. A single Redskin with his dog-sledge, thus carried letters to the lonely guards who watched over the growing stores of fur which "brave" and "squaw" bartered for axe, blankets, fire-water and beads. There was a "Swampy" Indian named Adam, who for more than twenty years yearly went a postman's beat of 3,000 miles with his dog-train. Five dark winter months annually passed away before he had finished his solitary round and left his last packet at the last weary and expectant fort. This old Redskin "Adam" was, however, but one in many generations who continuously threaded the enormous North-west Territories of British America, searching for, gathering and despatching "skins."—Leisure Hour.

DYNAMITERS.

MONTREAL, Feb. 5.—A detective of this city recently returned from a trip to the Southern States. On his homeward journey he stopped in New York. He says that on two consecutive evenings he attended secret meetings of dynamiters in Chambers street, dressed in green. Over 150 persons were present. Only the chairman and other officers were masked. The first evening was spent in making speeches, all tending to celebrate the splendid victory gained in London. On the following evening they explained their plots regarding Canada. Among those present the detective recognized a well known resident of this city. It was finally decided to send delegates to Canada to establish branches. A few days after his return to this city the detective discovered the meeting place of the plotters in the old saloon a few miles from Montreal. Although only three delegates were sent here the confederates numbered over fifty. At a recent meeting they decided to send three of the brotherhood to Ottawa, with the avowed purpose of blowing up the left wing of the Parliament House.

GENERAL NEWS.

LONDON, Feb. 5.—The completion of the Canadian Pacific Railway will provide England with a new route to Hong Kong, occupying but a little over a month, or sixteen days less than the Suez Canal route. This would enable England to land troops in China two days earlier than French troops starting at the same time, or the Russians from Odessa, in the event of the Suez Canal falling into hostile hands Canada might even send twenty or thirty thousand men, which she could easily spare in an emergency, in 25 days. All depends upon the cultivation of good feeling between Canada and England.

TORONTO, Feb. 5.—It is definitely settled that Mitchell and Scholes are to spar in the Adelaide Street Rink on the 23rd inst., under the auspices of the Lieut-Governor and the Toronto Fencing Club. Mitchell is guaranteed $500 He is expected to arrive next week, when he will go into training. The city has granted a libence for the affair.

MONTREAL, Feb. 9.—There is considerable excitement in society circles over the reported engagement of a well-known young broker, and his sudden skipping out to Uncle Sam's dominions. The young lady waf till recently a resident of Quebec, but has been here for the past six months. She is determined to make her lover fulfil his promise, or bring the case before the courts. Her brother is a well-known officer of the law in Quebac.

OTTAWA, Feb. 9.—Pursuant to the request of Col. Williams, it is stated that the Government has cabled the War Department of England offering to raise a regiment in Canada for service in Egypt.

LONDON, Feb. 9.—The further examination of Jas. G. Cunningham and Henry Burton, charged with the conspiracy in causing the explosion at the Tower began to-day. The Bow street police court was crowded with spectators. No unusual demonstration was made. H. Burton declined the services of counsel and said he would defend himself Solicitor Poland opened the case for the crown. He created a sensation by immediately announcing the withdrawal of the charge of conspiracy and the substitution of treason-felony against both prisoners jointly. Under the new indictment the solicitor proceeded to state that the testimony of the crown, which he would produce, would sustain a charge of high treason against the prisoners. In doing this, Mr. Poland, of necessity, repeated the history narrated at the former examination of Cunningeam and Burton.
